Going local does not mean walling off the outside world. It means nurturing locally owned businesses which use local resources sustainably, employ local workers at decent wages, and serve primarily local consumers. It means becoming more self-sufficient, and less dependant on imports. Control moves from the boardrooms of distant corporations and back to the community, where it belongs (p6)

The only way communities can ensure their economic well-being is to stop chasing multinational firms with no community loyalties, and start investing in community corporations. Prosperity follows when ownership, production, and consumption become intimately connected with place. (p7)

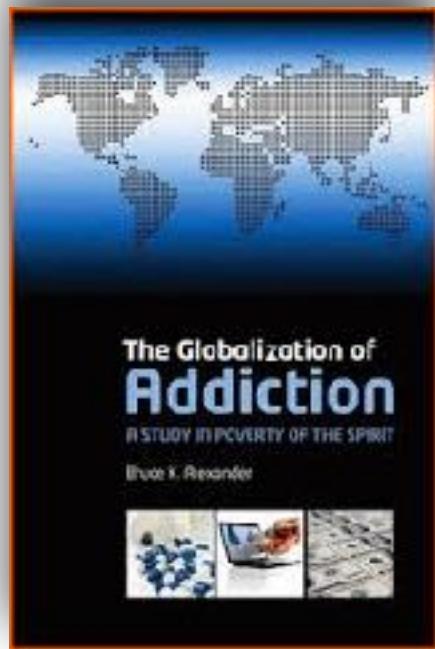

- ➊ develop clear shared values and goals to benefit our region over as wide a consensus as possible;
- ➋ assess our assets and resources;
- ➌ then build those up through minimising leakage;
- ➍ enhance co-operation between local government, businesses, training institutions and;
- ➎ out of that to develop a new “normal”

Dislocation is the condition of a great number of human beings who have been shorn from their cultures and individual identities by the globalisation of the "free-market society" in which the needs of the people are subordinated to the imperatives of markets and the economy. Dislocation afflicts both people who have been physically displaced, such as economic immigrants and refugees, and people who have remained in place while their cultures disintegrated around them. Dislocation occurs during boom times as well as recessions, among the rich as well as the poor, along capitalists as well as workers.

Bruce K. Alexander, Professor Emeritus, Psychology Department, Simon Fraser University, Burnaby, Canada - The Globalization of Addiction

As we move further down the road to giantism, globalism, and dependance, we make it harder and harder to back up and take another path. If we lose our skills, our productive base, our culture, our traditions, our natural resources; if we erode the bonds of personal and familial responsibility, it becomes even more difficult recreate community. It is very, very hard to put Humpty Dumpty back together again.

Step 1: Identify shared values (“A Community Bill of Rights”)

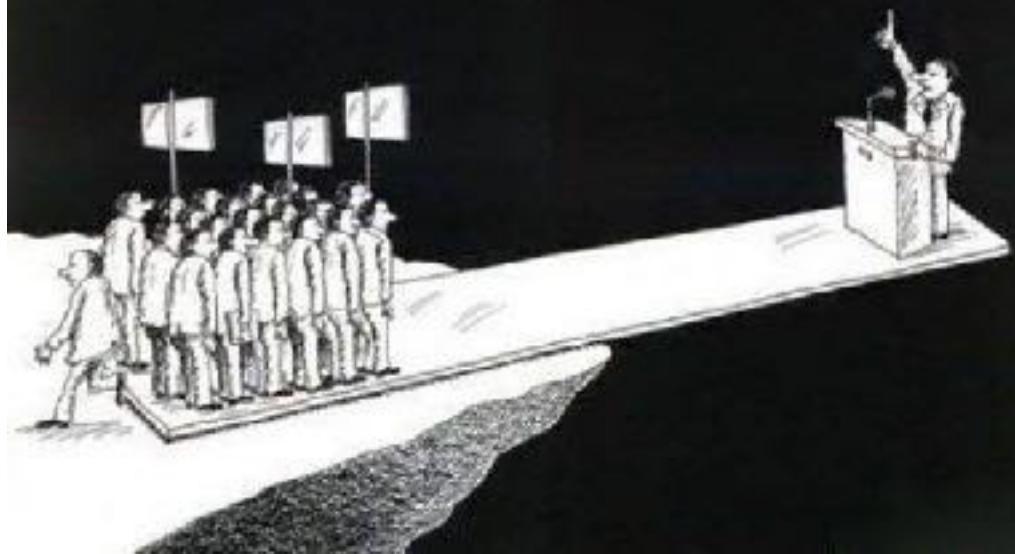

It enables residents to assert, fundamentally, that ends come before means – that businesses are welcome if they serve the community. It creates a set of public norms about commercial behaviour ... A business's faithfulness to the Rights, while voluntary, carries consequences. Every time a citizen considers making a purchase...he or she will have the list of qualifying companies in mind. - Maintaining a diversity of skill sets in such areas as agriculture, horticulture and manufacturing to reduce dependence on fragile and expensive supply chains and increase local jobs

...from an economic development perspective, the evidence is clear that with strong clusters comes growth in employment... economies with strong clusters have higher levels of innovation, higher productivity, more entrepreneurship, more new business start-ups, higher export and economic growth, higher wages and better productivity.

- ➊ How do we develop these values and who should do it?
- ➋ How do we ensure widespread involvement and consensus?
- ➌ How do we keep these in the public eye, retaining an ongoing focus?

Step 2: Taking stock ("The State of the Region Report")

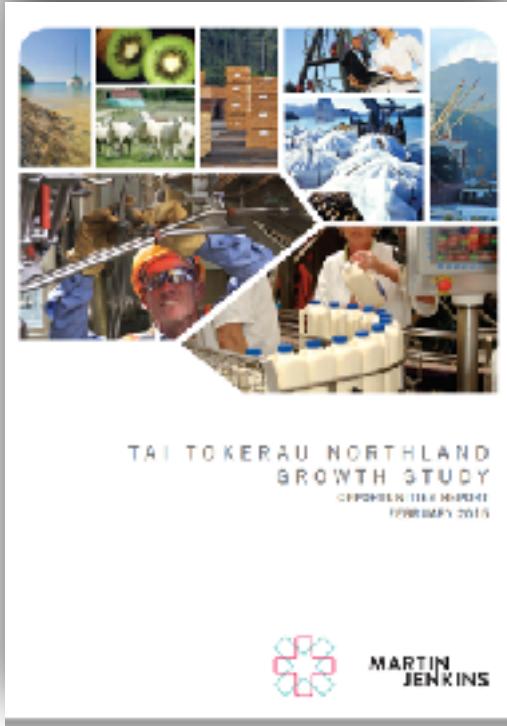

Virtually every community... has a gold mine which economists have yet to discover. Along its veins and other deposits may be found unemployed human resources, underused civic institutions, and discarded economic assets.... Many kinds of human assets now lie fallow..... the inventiveness of the young, the forgotten skills of retirees... tally the inanimate objects that have been all but written off: empty buildings, idle machinery, wasted energy. (p184)

While the report recognises that there is no “silver bullet” or industry that will transform the Northland economy, it recognises that the Northland region has significant untapped potential.

- Who will do this work of developing the current data and new data into reports written from a local resilience perspective?
- How do we ensure widespread involvement and consensus?
- How do we keep this in the public eye once it is complete?

Step 3: Identify who is leading the way and learn from them (“Anchor Corporations”)

KAI Ā-ROHE O TE TAITOKERAU
LOCAL FOOD NORTHLAND

The existence of one or two successful community corporations – using local inputs, producing quality goods, operating in harmony with the environment, selling to local consumers, treating workers well, delivering profit to local shareholders – should inspire others to follow... As they increase the demand for inputs to production, new firms will be motivated to set up shop. (p187-188)

- How do we champion the work of these as models to be emulated?
- How do we network these and other organisations together in clusters for increased effectiveness?

Step 4: Training and mentoring ("Community friendly business schools")

The transformation of business schools and university economics departments is another imperative. These institutions now celebrate personal profit over community service....Economics and business need to become professions with the highest principles of charity and public service. (p189)

The standard of the exploiter is efficiency; the standard of the nurturer is care. The exploiter's goal is money, profit; the nurturer's goal is health - the land's health, his own, his family's, his community's, his country's...The exploiter wishes to earn as much as possible by as little work as possible; the nurturer expects, certainly, to have a decent living from his work, but his characteristic wish is to work as well as possible.

- admitting that one cannot control one's addiction or compulsion;
- recognising a higher power that can give strength;
- examining past errors with the help of a sponsor (experienced member);
- making amends for these errors;
- learning to live a new life with a new code of behaviour;
- helping others who suffer from the same addictions or compulsions.
